

Ali Chambers

Ali Chambers qualified as a musician after graduating from the Guildhall School of Drama and Music and the University of East Anglia. She began her career as a music producer at BBC Radio 3 and then worked for several independent production companies in London. Her career changed direction when Ali took up a role in the Foreign Commonwealth and Development Office and lived overseas for 12 years in Saudi Arabia and India, where her daughter was born. Returning to the UK in 2017, Ali worked as CEO of the Rainbow Centre, and is now Head of Fundraising for Mission Aviation Fellowship, a faith based international development charity based in Folkestone. When she's not at work, Ali and her two children sing in the choirs at St Leonards Church.

Ali hopes to bring her strategic and leadership skills to the Governing Body and is passionate about supporting a faith based education for young people.
